Tribes of the Great Plains

The Great Plains of the United States was home to many different tribes of Native Americans. The plains stretched from the central part of Texas to the north to Canada in the North, covering over a half million square miles, a distance that could be traveled in a few days.

The Native Americans who lived on the Great Plains were mostly nomads. They moved from place to place to follow the buffalo. They lived in portable houses called tipis or tepees, which could be taken apart and carried to a new location.

The nomadic way of life was very tough because of harsh weather. The Plains were divided into many different regions. The tribes in the western Great Plains were hunting buffalo for food. The tribes in the eastern Great Plains were hunting bison for food. The tribes in the southern Great Plains were hunting deer for food. The tribes in the northern Great Plains were hunting caribou for food.

The tribes of the Great Plains were very brave and strong. They were able to survive in a very harsh environment. They were also very skilled hunters and warriors. They were able to travel long distances and survive in a very difficult environment.

The tribes of the Great Plains were very important to the history of the United States. They were the first people to live on the Great Plains. They were also the first people to use horses for transportation. They were the first people to use tipis for shelter. They were the first people to use bison for food. They were the first people to use caribou for food.
